The truth is, feminism is divided within itself too, hence the hesitation and confusion people experience when faced with it. There is a spectrum of beliefs ranging from the view that feminism loses its utility after women are allowed the right to vote to the embarrassing and shameful transphobic conspiracy theories pushed into the limelight by trans-exclusionary radicals.

The problem with feminism - The Oxford Student

The problem is that feminism is more than a philosophy or a group of beliefs. It is, now, also a political movement, a social identity, as well as a set of institutions. See, there's this thing that happens to groups of people. They always start out with an idea.

What's the Problem with Feminism? - Mark Manson

The problem: "Feminism" has been adopted as a solution for "gender inequality." Feminism doesn't work anymore because gender inequality is based on a one-way flow. Generally, gender inequality has become stagnant because women are moving into gender non-traditional roles (i.e., CEO's, politicians), but men are NOT moving into gender non-traditional roles (i.e., homemakers, nurses).

Radical feminism is responsible for bringing attention to many important issues – the biggest ones being issues of rape, sexual assault and domestic violence – but its limited and narrow view has segregated its members from banding together with other feminists, and that subsequently has led to a lot of misconceptions about what feminism really is. This is our first problem.
